THE SERVICE ACADEMIES command much attention this week, as arrangements for graduation ceremonies next week are being completed. Presidential appointments of USMA and USNA '58 graduates to the REGULAR AIR FORCE are published on Page 9 (the 18 May issue carried earlier nominations of '58 graduates in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps). On Page 11, there's an impressive list of "SONS OF THE SERVICE" in the West Point class, and on Page 19 USMA wedding plans are reported. Related information from Annapolis was not available as THE JOURNAL went to press.

YOU WILL WANT TO READ about Army officer promotion plans, Page 4 (there's a list of new RA LIEUTENANT COLONELS on Page 28), and how the airborne division in Germany is being reorganized in the vanguard of the Pentomic Army, Page 5.

Pentagon O.K.'s New O'Sea Benefits; Allowances Will Ease Transfer Cost Burden

Additions and changes to Joint Travel Regulations which will ease the financial burden imposed upon Servicemen assigned overseas soon will go into effect. Benefits could be worth several hundred dollars, or more, to many military families.

The new provisions, prepared by the Defense Department's Per Diem, Travel and Transportation Committee, will benefit officers and men ordered to oversea areas where housing is not immediately available.

The Committee is hopeful that the new entitlements will be reproduced and incorporated into the voluminous Joint Regulations in time to be effective on 1 July. The mechanics of reproduction, however, may delay the effective date of the changes until 1 August.

Congressman Gavin Bares Charge That Key West Doctrine "Undermines Army"

(GENERAL WEYLAND TELLS TAC POWER, P. 8)

THE long-standing dispute over military roles and missions erupted anew this week with charges that current Armed Forces doctrine has "undermined the Army" and caused it to lose both power and prestige.

The charges—growing out of a House Armed Services Committee member's concern about close air support for Army ground troops—are made by one of the Army's senior retired officers.

In a letter to Representative Leon H. Gavin (R-Pa), the top-ranking retired general declares that "a fatal weakness" in the Key West Agreement gives the Air Force and Navy complete independence but forces the Army to rely on her sister services for needed tools to fight the ground war.

Congressman Gavin, who has been waging a battle for the development of techniques to give the ground soldier better air cover, made the letter available to THE JOURNAL but asked that the author's identity not be revealed.

Representative Gavin said, "It is essential that the conflicting views on the subject be aired in order to place the problem in its proper perspective.

"We need to be assured that our infantrymen, who are on the ground in the cold, heat, filth, fatigue, misery and mud of mechanized warfare, are given every tool they require to see them through

Pay Plan Periled

The Pentagon proposal to add $50 million to the pay checks of enlisted technicians will have to be shelved if Congress approves the $2.5 billion cut in the Defense budget recommended by the House Appropriations Committee.

This view was expressed by Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson in an appearance before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Despite the House Committee's statement that the reductions will not affect present manpower levels, Secretary Wilson said the cut "can be made only by personnel reductions below the budgeted ceilings."

Additionally, he said, the cuts "would leave no flexibility for meeting new necessary undertakings, such as limited implementation of Cordiner Committee recommendations designed to retain in

CofS Taylor Foresees New Army Planes; "Ground Vehicles Without Footprints"

(SECY "Much Disturbed," P. 11)

General Maxwell D. Taylor, USA, Chief of Staff, has declared that the Army "must inevitably move in the direction of new and novel flying machines which will probably be very much different in appearance from the conventional types we know today."

Testifying before the Senate Appropriations Committee on 24 May, General Taylor said these aircraft "have been described as ground vehicles which do not leave footprints."

The Chief of Staff said the vehicles "flying a few feet above the ground, darting down valleys and ravines, hovering behind woods and hills, and scurrying around and behind enemy forces suggest the shape of things to come."

General Taylor told the Senators that "we seem to have gone just about as far as we can go in the search for mobility through improved ground vehicles.

"There will be improvements in the future, of course, in range, flotation, combat worthiness and armament," he commented. "However, none of these improvements in ground vehicles will overcome the traditional barriers of terrain to the extent that they must be overcome if we are to take the large step forward required by nuclear warfare.

"We must look for aerial vehicles which can move across the terrain at 60 or 70 miles an hour, whether that terrain consists of mountains, jungles, swamps, rivers or plains.

"This is the direction in which Army Aviation must lead which, I reiterate, is not in the direction of another Air Force."

Services Face Many Investigations And Studies In New Fiscal Year

IF the military Services complete all of the studies ordered by the House Appropriations Committee, the costs could be astronomical.

In reporting the Defense Department budget, the Committee asked the Pentagon to:

- Submit a list of all major installations and show the percentage of utilization of each, together with a written report on the number of major or minor installations which can be closed in the interest of economy and efficiency.
- Initiate a study to determine the amount and kind of furniture currently used in public quarters in each of the Services, together with costs of storing personally owned furniture for families assigned to already-furnished Government quarters.
- Explore, study and effectuate all means for minimizing the number of dependents abroad through a better system of determining personnel requirements and better screening of personnel for specific billets.
- Furnish the Committee with quarterly reports on vacancies of bed spaces and other areas in military hospitals, as a means of determining the extent to which military hospital and medical facilities are being utilized.
- Survey requirements for vehicles of all types with the view of substantially reducing the entire fleet, either on a Department-wide or Service-wide basis.
- Closely examine the numbers of aircraft maintained for administrative purposes.
- Investigate the practice of employing various groups of scientific and technical specialists on a contract basis, and take necessary action to keep this situation under control.
- Investigate increase in costs being paid to defense contractors.
- Submit a complete report on the numbers of so-called experts and consultants, including management engineering firms, employed by agencies of the Department of Defense to furnish accounting and management advice.
- Review Navy policies concerning promotion and retirement of officer personnel with the view in mind of utilizing to a much larger degree the skills and experience of personnel facing forced retirement because of lack of vacancies.
- Review present Navy methods used in initial provisioning and in subsequent replenishment of spare parts, holding these methods to the minimum consistent with the operational needs of the Navy.
- Give close scrutiny to Navy and Marine Corps administrative flying and other nonessential type flight operations as well as the extent of flight training operations, with the view in mind of eliminating that which is not essential to the operational capabilities of Naval and Marine aviation.
- Thoroughly review the essentiality of installing optical landing systems in Naval aviation shore establishments.
- Review the present Navy policy relative to the length of tours of duty for personnel assigned to Naval intelligence billets with the view of stabilizing these assignments and, if practicable, lengthening them where this is necessary.

Sec'y Brucker Tells Communist Strength, Cites 6½ Million In Ground Forces

(Disarmament talks in London this week attracted widespread attention, as efforts were made to achieve initial successes in reducing military strength. Perspective on the problem is presented in the following excerpt from testimony given last week by Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker before the Senate Appropriations Committee. He reported as follows on Communist ground strength.)

THE Soviet-Sino bloc has a gigantic military machine consisting of over 6½ million men in its ground forces. The Soviet Army ground forces alone number over 2½ million men organized into 100 Rifle Divisions, 55 Mechanized Divisions, 20 Tank Divisions, and supporting units. Most of these divisions are located in the border regions of the USSR, except for 22 divisions in East Germany, 2 divisions in Poland, and 2 in Rumania. The normal garrison of 2 divisions in Hungary was reinforced by about 5 more divisions from the USSR and Rumania for the suppression of the revolution.

The Soviets last year made much of an announced intention to reduce their armed forces, (ground, sea, and air) by a total of one million, two hundred thousand men. So far we have no evidence to show that such reductions have been made.

THE SOVIET GROUND forces have been in large measure re-equipped since World War II. This re-equipment program has provided them with a complete new family of small arms, new artillery pieces, new trucks, medium tanks, and amphibious vehicles, as well as helicopters.

As an example of the extent of the re-equipment program, we estimate that about 28,000 of the new T-54 medium tanks have been produced. Soviet Forces in East Germany have received approximately 4,000 of these.

THE CHINESE COMMUNISTS also maintain large army ground forces 2½ million men organized into approximately 150 divisions plus supporting units. This army has been undergoing an important reorganization and modernization program since 1952 to include standardization of weapons, increased service and support units and a vastly expanded military school system.

The North Korean and Viet Minh armies add to Communist military capabilities in the Far East. In Eastern Europe, the satellites maintain fairly large armies but in view of the recent developments there, we believe that the majority of these forces would not be sufficiently reliable for offensive operations against the West.

THE SAVAGE PURGE of liberty in Hungary, the unmistakable attempts of the Soviet Union to establish a foothold in the vital Middle East, the increasingly brazen efforts of the Kremlin to foment discord, exploit unrest, and sap the power and resolution of the Free World have sounded a clarion warning. They have used the threat of force to exert the pressure of political domination on world affairs. There is no reasonable doubt as to what would be in store for us if we should fail to man our own defenses with strength, determination and constant vigilance.

We must be ready to counter aggression not only in general war but also in any other form. There is therefore a need to proportion our force to the threat in whatever form it may take.

(Highlights from the testimony of Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates and Secretary of the Air Force James H. Douglas will be published in next week's issue of The Journal)

Key West Accord Is Under Attack

From first page—

combat. If that means integral tactical air units for every Army division, then I say, they should be given every opportunity to develop such a program."

Congressman Gavin advocates at least a token training force which will enable the Army to gain the air-ground know-how which characterizes Marine Corps training and operations.

The letter addressed to Mr. Gavin notes that present battle doctrine places the Army infantry commander in "the unhappy dependent role of a suppliant with hat in hand." In the Pacific during WW II, Air Force tactical support for the Army "was pitifully small and grossly inept," the letter states.

The Air Force, in reply to an earlier inquiry from the House Armed Services Committee (THE JOURNAL, 23 March) said recent policy decisions at the top level in the Pentagon tend to move the Air Force "out of the ground battle zone." As for Marine Corps close air support, the Air Force said such "lavish" use of air power "may be desirable in highly specialized operations such as amphibious landings" but "not in large scale, extended-time ground operations."

Mr. Gavin's correspondent notes that of the 61 major amphibious landings in WW II, "the Army participated in 58 and the Marines in 14."

The Army has been asked by the House Armed Services Committee to give its views on the Air Force statement. Mr. Gavin said he is anxiously awaiting this study and added that he understands it is now nearing completion.

Here is the complete text of the letter which Congressman Gavin has received from one of the Army's top general officers, now retired:

"Dear Mr. Gavin:

"Thanks for your letter of 29 March enclosing the Air Force explanation of their tactical air support doctrine.

"May I say this is the same old Air Force line.

"The 'roles and missions' assigned to the three services under the so-called 'Key West Agreement,' 1948, contained a fatal weakness for one of the services—the Army—which, I think, fundamentally undermined the Army and is the cause of the succession of losses of its power and prestige over the last 10 years, as well as currently.

Fundamental Weakness

"This fundamental weakness lies in the fact that both the Air Force and the Navy are assigned missions which serve as a basis for organization, bases, equipment, and weapons which make each service entirely independent and self-contained for carrying out those missions. The Army, on the other hand, is dependent on the Air Force for tactical air support and air transportation; and upon the Navy for tactical air support, gun-fire support, and sea transport.

"Thus when the chips are down in war (and during peacetime due to budgetary limitations) and men or equipment are in short supply, it is only natural that the independent services (i.e. Air Force & Navy) give priority to their own respective missions and the Army is left holding the proverbial empty bag. Worse than that, the Air Force by way of its bases in the U. S. and the western hemisphere and its growing 'air police' for defense of overseas bases, as in North Africa; and the Navy by way of the Marine Corps, are actually independent of the Army and can do their own ground fighting. That is, as far as they need—or at least as far as they think they need—they can perform within themselves the ground fighting mission assigned the Army under the Key West Agreement.

"Hat In Hand"

"So when the Air Force, as on page 539 of the Report, states that 'it is natural for a (Army) Division Commander to feel that his job is of primary importance but he must realize that there are other commanders who feel the same way,' their collective tongues must be protruding through their collective cheeks. No doubt the Division Commander (Army) does realize that there are Air Force & Navy Commanders 'who feel the same way'—and that's the hell of it. For in a pinch, when they are in short supply of means, they are going to follow these feelings and use these means to accomplish their own missions surely and primarily. So the Air Force Commander, with what he requires available to him, is just not in the same spot as the Infantry Division Commander who fills the unhappy dependent role of a suppliant with hat in hand.

"In fact it was the Air Force's feeling of frustration, due to the intolerability of dependence on the Army, that led, more than any other factor, to the establishment of the Army Air Force as more or less a self-contained unit in 1940, and later to its complete independence as another service in 1947. Therefore, that part of their reply which parallels their commanders to the Army's division commanders may well be regarded as a new high in hypocrisy.

Flexibility Essential

"I quite agree with their theory that there must be a centrally controlled tactical reserve, but the point is that each Division Commander must have under his own control a basic minimum support which he can count on to use; otherwise he has virtually no flexibility to stem a sudden attack or to take advantage of the all important element of surprise. However, this is a basic principle of all military doctrine. For instance, the Infantry Division has a minimum force of engineers and artillery; when they need more the Corps has organic artillery and engineers to support such of the Divisions that need it; so with the next higher unit—the Field Army. And so on. If tactical air is a weapon, why shouldn't the same principle hold true? I don't think our Division Commanders necessarily feel their jobs are of the greatest importance, but I do think they question, and are concerned that they do not have a reasonable minimum of air support under their own control as do the Marines.

"In this latter connection relative to the Air Force argument side-stepping the need of a wing because of the 'special nature' of amphibious operations, the speciousness of the Air Force position can be illustrated by the fact that of the 61 major amphibious landings in World War II, the Army participated in 58, and the Marines in 14. Of the number of divisions participating in major landings the Army had 143 and the Marines 21. Of the 61 major operations the Army commanded 45 and the Navy 16, and I take it none by the Marines—that is, overall commanders.

"Another significant figure is shore-to-shore operations which usually take place after the Navy with their landing boats pull out and are undertaken by the Commander of troops ashore to capture some off-lying island or strong point on the mainland some distance from the original landing beach. There were 324 such landings made by the Army against 20 for the Marines.

"Rough On The Doughboy"

"Our tactical support by the 5th and 13th Air Forces in southwest Pacific was pitifully small and grossly inept until March 1945 when the Jap air was pulled back for defense of the Home Empire. Whereas the Naval support from escort carriers at Leyte (we had no carriers for the first two years, 1942-44 in New Guinea) was superb; and the Marine wing that supported us in the Luzon campaign was a wonderful experience for all of us.

"The Air Force position was just that described in their statement, namely that the greatest threat was the Jap air and they couldn't take care of both. As long as the Army has no organic air support it will always be the same—but it is a little rough on the doughboy who sees his Marine colleague getting the best support on earth!"

Budget Cuts Threaten Manpower Ceiling, Pay Raise; Sec. Wilson Asks Restoration

service skilled technical personnel."

He said the Departments had planned to try to absorb the cost of the added pay raises for up to 15 per cent of the enlisted members of the Armed Forces, but the proposed cutback in funds will not permit such an undertaking.

He told the Senators also that some of the Cordier recommendations require further study and that the Pentagon expects to send "additional recommendations to the Congress next year."

In a hard-hitting defense of the military budget, Mr. Wilson told the Senate Committee he hopes it "will see fit" to restore those reductions which will have "an immediate impact on our defense program."

The other cuts which represent adjustments in capital funds or involve new obligations authority not immediately affecting the Pentagon program are matters of judgment, he said, but "it should be recognized that most of them will have to be restored in subsequent years."

If all the reductions are permitted to stand, he said they will "amount to gambling unwisely with the security of the Nation."

He testified that the reductions in the fields of major Navy and Air Force procurement "will, for the most part, have the direct effect of reducing the military program." The principal impact, he said, will be "in the field of aircraft, ships and missile procurement."

He added, "I believe that these cuts should be restored."

Secretary Wilson told the Senate Committee that "Loose charges of overlapping, duplication and waste are easily stated but in most instances are grossly exaggerated and relate to only minor aspects of Defense Department programs."

He said he does not subscribe "to the belief that any particular benefit would be derived by abolishing the separate military services and putting the men all into the same uniform."

Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.), asked the Defense Secretary if he thinks greater unification "would result in reduced costs."

Mr. Wilson replied, "I do not think it would improve the situation to concentrate more power and authority in one man. The big thing," he said, "is to get the right kind of information and decide on the right thing to do."

Regarding inter-Service rivalry, the Defense Secretary said he believes healthy differences of opinion "is a sound thing." He said, "You can't order people to come into agreement when there is no agreement."

Discussing duplication in the development of weapons, he said "it is desirable in many instances to try more than one way of producing a weapon in order to save time and make certain that the best one for the purpose is developed. Duplication of this sort is necessary insurance when we are dealing with the development of revolutionary new weapons that tax the limits of our scientific knowledge."

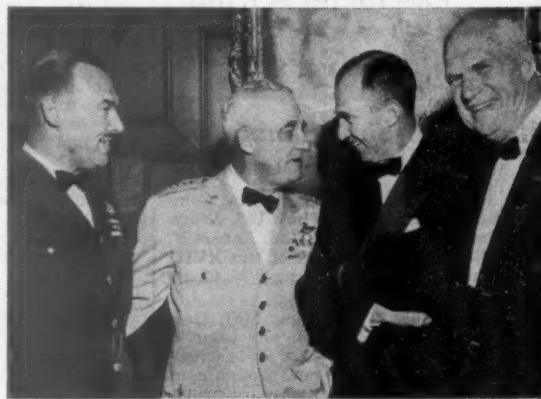

Concentration of funds and efforts in a single area is determined, he said, only after "we have enough technical information to determine which is the best." For example, he said, "we have already determined that we are going to make only one intermediate range ballistic missile."

Taking issue with the House Committee's statement that the nature and extent of a military threat against the U.S. and its allies appears "to have somewhat abated," Secretary Wilson said "While some may believe that there is current hope for improvement in the international situation there is no real basis, as far as I can see, for assuming that the danger has already lessened. Cuts based on hope alone are too risky."

He added that he does not believe "real reductions in our security programs can be made." This, he told the Committee, is also the "unanimous position of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Secretaries of the Military Departments."

The Chairman of the Joint Chief of Staff, Admiral Arthur W. Radford, USN, who accompanied the Defense Secretary, testified that he is in complete agreement with Mr. Wilson. He said any large cuts in the military budget "would risk the security of the Nation and the Free World."

Navy Air Chief Cites Budget Problem; "Must Adapt Our Plans To Realities"

KANSAS CITY, MO.

THE Navy's top aviator, VADM. W. V. Davis, Jr., DCNO (Air), this week unveiled new details concerning two new missiles—the Raytheon Sparrow III and the Martin Bullpup—in an address to Aviation Writers Association members here.

Reporting on missile progress, Admiral Davis took the occasion of his address to warn that in the face of "outlandish" costs for development and production, of new weapons, "every nickel of procurement money has to be carefully squeezed until the buffalo bellows and the Indian howls."

He told the aviation writers that "recent actions of Congress indicate the public attitude on defense spending and the size of the budget. We must adapt our plans to the realities."

"With rapidly rising costs and no increase in budget," he declared, "our aim must be a smaller but sharper force."

Admiral Davis said that "grandiose plans of a year or so back, both in the Service and in Industry, are in for some painful tree surgery."

In reporting on new missile achievements, Admiral Davis was given authorization by the Defense Department to present the following information on Sparrow III and Bullpup.

SPARROW III

"Our squadrons deployed on carriers overseas are equipped with air-to-air guided missiles of far greater accuracy, range and kill capability than has ever been known before."

"Also coming along is Sparrow III. Sparrow III is an air-to-air, supersonic guided missile, developed by the Raytheon Manufacturing Company, Boston, Mass., and has been called the most advanced weapon of its time. The new, improved missile will replace the Sparrow I. The Sparrow III is an all-weather missile which can be fired above or through clouds with complete accuracy. The Sparrow III is 12 feet long, weighs about 350 pounds and attains a speed of over 1,500 MPH within seconds after launching."

"Navy fighters can carry two to four sparrows. All-weather fighters presently in the fleet are capable of carrying Sparrow III. Increasing numbers of our all-weather fighters will see future fleet services armed with this advanced, potent weapon."

Bullpup's Breeding Told

"Guided missile weapon systems are born of a necessity. Some are engaged by recognition of the advancing state of warfare, and the ever mounting threat, and others are born of a specific requirement generated by particular combat experiences."

"Into this specific requirement category falls one of the Navy's new air-to-surface missiles—the Bullpup. The basic concept of this missile system was conceived during the Korean war. During this conflict pilots were badly harassed by enemy small arms and automatic ground fire, particularly in close air support and interdiction missions which required low level dive and glide bombing attacks to be effective. This intense ground fire seriously deteriorated bombing accuracy and caused excessive attrition of planes and pilots. In addition, weather conditions and the rugged terrain, as well as the heavy concentration of enemy fire power, prevented the pilots from attaining the precise dive angles, air speeds and other launching conditions necessary to successful dive and glide bombing."

"The obvious answer to this undesirable tactical situation was to develop a missile that could be launched from any position outside the effective radius of the enemy high volume ground fire, and still provide sufficient accuracy to destroy small targets without excessive sorties and the expenditure of large quantities of bombs and rockets on each target."

"The Navy considered simplicity of design and the use of known techniques well within the state of the art to be basic ground rules for the Bullpup development, in order to obtain an early, relatively inexpensive, and effective weapon. The final weapon system was required to be compatible with current and future light attack aircraft, and to be equally suitable for carrier based operations and shore based Marine Corps use. Ruggedness and reliability were equally important design objectives."

Bullpup Heads For Fleet

"Bullpup fulfills all these exacting requirements. Bullpup is expected to provide light attack aircraft with a significantly greater attack capability against pill boxes, tanks, truck convoys, bridges, railroad tracks, ships and marshalling yards. This increased effectiveness is due primarily to the increased accuracy with which the warhead can be delivered on the target."

"Bullpup is currently undergoing evaluation by the Navy, and will be subsequently introduced into the fleet as a service weapon. We expect that it will be a really effective addition to the Navy's capability in fighting small wars as well as big ones."

AWA COVERAGE

THE JOURNAL's on-the-scene coverage of the Aviation Writers' Association convention, with headquarters in St. Louis, Mo., will continue in next week's issue.

The St. Louis sessions, with visits also to Kansas City, Mo., Scott AFB, Ill., and Wichita, Kans., have brought together the nation's top aviation writers.

Hercules Lab Awarded Missile Fuel Contract

The Navy has let a $3.5 million contract to the Hercules Powder Co., Allegheny Ballistics Laboratory, Cumberland, Md., for engineering and testing of experimental propulsion systems for guided missiles.

The Company operates the government-owned lab for the Bureau of Ordnance. The lab is the Navy's chief facility for research, development, and experimental production of solid propellants for missiles.

Rep. Kilday Proposes Plan To Strip And Dye Old Uniforms Before They Can Be Sold

Representative Paul J. Kilday (D-Tex.) has asked Congress to take steps to preserve the distinctive character of Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps uniforms.

He wants to block the open-market sale of military uniforms to civilians. If they are sold, they must be stripped of all insignia, buttons, chevrons and other distinctive parts and dyed black.

Congressman Kilday, a ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee, has introduced legislation (HR 7525) which would accomplish these objectives.

"Military men," he states, "should be proud of the uniform they wear. It is a symbol to all that the individual follows the honored profession of arms in our country's defense."

"Instead of being the pride of his honored profession the military man has seen his uniform used as work clothing or worn by those engaged in menial tasks."

The Armed Services Committee member noted that the Air Force blue uniform is relatively new, that the Army is in the process of converting to its new green uniform and the Marines are currently planning uniform changes.

Since none of these uniforms have been disposed of on the open market, he said, "This is the proper time to take steps to preserve the distinctive character of all the uniforms of our Armed Services."

He said his proposal also will minimize the desire to change uniform colors and materials "which comes about from the use of the uniform by others than members of our armed services."

Army Lists Eligibles
For Temporary Major

The Army released the names of approximately 3000 captains who will be eligible for selection this summer to temporary major.

The names are listed in Circular 624-10 and include approximately 2500 line officers.

Selection boards will convene 16 July to consider officers for promotion to major.

The zone of consideration includes captains on the Army, WAC, VC and MSC lists with AUS promotion eligibility date of 31 May 1951 or earlier.

The Chaplains zone is 31 Jan. 1951. A date of 31 May 1952 is used for Medical Specialist Corps officers.

For Nurses and members of the Medical Specialist Corps, where a "best qualified" method of selection will be used, the eligibility date is 31 August 1950 and 31 October 1950, respectively.

AUS promotion eligibility dates are computed as follows:

a. For those officers who have not received a promotion on current tour of extended active duty this date will precede the date of entry by active Federal commissioned service in his current or higher grade.

b. For officers promoted while on active duty this date is the date of promotion to that grade or the date specified in the promotion order.

c. Officers who had higher AUS appointments terminated or who were demoted for any reason will not be credited with service in a higher grade, if they have subsequently received an active duty promotion.

The Army said this. Officers in the following categories, otherwise eligible, have been or will be removed from the zones of consideration.

a. Officers who will be relieved from active duty prior to 30 August, 1957, the estimated adjournment date of the selection boards.

b. Officers whose requests for renewal

Army Plans 11,192 Officer Promotions

DESPITE a drop of 6000 officers from the start of the current fiscal year, the Army plans virtually the same number of officer promotions in fiscal '58 compared to '57, newly released Congressional testimony shows.

There will be 11,192 promotions to captain and above during the 12 months starting 1 July; for the current fiscal year, the total is 11,285.

The following two tables show the comparisons and give the comparative strength breakdowns by grades for two fiscal years.

Gen. Harris Tells How "Heavyweight" 11th Airborne Slims To "Middleweight"

BY MAJ. GEN. HUGH P. HARRIS, USA
Commanding General, 11th Airborne Division

ON 14 March 1957, an official announcement was made that the 11th Airborne Division would be slenderized from its status as a heavyweight division with a limited airborne capability, to a lighter, more agile, faster middleweight division with both ground and airborne potential.

This directive required the 11th to reduce from a 17,000 man division, with three full strength Infantry Regiments and five supporting Artillery Battalions plus Division troops, to an eleven thousand five hundred 5 battle group structure. Each new group was to have 5 Rifle Companies and a Heavy Mortar Battery, backed up with a proportionate share of conventional Artillery, Heavy Rockets, Engineer and service units. All equipment was to be air transportable or suitable for aerial delivery and all personnel was to be parachute qualified. Furthermore, the new Division was to have a highly centralized maintenance and supply system and "area" type communications. These three factors were new concepts in our airborne tactical units. These requirements were the same as those placed on the 101st Airborne Division early in 1955. However, the situation of the 11th and 101st Airborne Divisions differed vastly in four respects: First, the 11th Airborne Division had an immediate combat mission as a part of the ever ready Seventh Army. Second, the 11th Airborne Division was faced with secretly reducing the size of its organization and disposing of quantities of surplus weapons, vehicles, tanks, and personnel. The 11th had to go on a severe diet. Conversely, the 101st Division was conceived on paper and began its pentomic reorganization with a nucleus which, over a period of time, needed to grow into its desired size. Thirdly, there was little or no dispersion between units of the 101st Division since all elements were stationed at Ft. Campbell, Ky., whereas, the 11th Division was divided between 10 different kasernes in two large cities which were 35 miles apart. Fourth, the 11th did not have the usual logistical support from Post installations.

Shortly after the reorganization warning order was received, the Division Commander and members of his staff visited the 101st Airborne Division at Ft. Campbell and received full cooperation and valuable benefit from the experiences of our stateside counterpart. Upon return of our key personnel to Germany, preliminary planning began immediately and all possible paper work was completed prior to the initiation of the official reorganization.

By the 15th of March, needed staff work and preliminary plans had been completed and the physical change began to take effect within the Division. By the 15th of April the internal composition of the Division had been changed as required and all units were busily engaged in retraining under the new concepts. In a period of one month this game of musical chairs was completed. Only for a period of ten days was the division's capability to do its combat job materially affected.

The eight main tasks to be accomplished by the 11th Airborne Division in a period of 1½ months were generally as follows:

a. To designate senior commanders and base units which would have the overall responsibility for sponsoring and forming the newly designated Companies, Batteries, and Headquarters, and then to select the best subalterns, non-commissioned officers and key specialists for the reduced number of organizations.

b. To select and officially designate the filler personnel to be retained in the reorganized division or to be reassigned to other Army units in the theater.

c. To provide table of organization equipment to newly designated units from stocks of the old units, and to assemble, under Division control, the spare parts and extra materials which would be needed to establish centralized maintenance and supply and area type communications. Then, to requisition needed additional items from existing supply sources.

d. To process and turn in to Army Depots or to ship to other units, as directed, surplus organizational equipment, weapons and wheeled vehicles and to reallocate Company and Battery funds and properties to the newly designated units; then to inspect and close out property records of the old units.

e. To centralize unit administration, at the group level, to relieve Company and Battery commanders of the duties for which personnel were no longer to be provided in the table of organization.

f. To develop and publish standardized procedures for centralized maintenance and supply and area type communications.

g. To retrain all elements in new tactical and administrative duties.

h. To modify classified defense plans to conform to the capabilities and limitations of the new division.

The reorganization of the 11th Airborne Division was completed far ahead of the originally expected schedule through the concerted effort and professional know how of all members of the division, coupled with splendid cooperation and support of higher headquarters, plus valuable assistance and guidance received from the 101st Airborne Division. Now operating at peak efficiency, the divisional units are conducting routine training, participating in field exercises and practice alerts, preparing for Army training tests, and conducting large scale demonstrations as directed by higher headquarters. The total job performed by the division was recognized by General Henry I. Hodes, Commander in Chief, United States Army, Europe, when he wrote: "It has been a pleasure to observe the smoothly effected reorganization of the 11th Airborne Division under the pentomic concept. The speed and efficiency with which the changeover was accomplished are particularly gratifying. To those familiar with the history of the 11th Airborne, this comes as no surprise. It is in keeping with the traditional ability of the division to get the job done, whether it be a combat mission or a peacetime assignment. It also bears active evidence of the readiness of the Army today to adjust quickly to the needs of modern warfare."

Army Licks Last Stamp

The Army will quit using postage stamps on 1 July.

On that date, a simplified procedure for reimbursement to the Post Office Department for the transmission of official mail will go into effect. Under the new system, Maj. Gen. Herbert M. Jones, USA, The Adjutant General of the Army, said, prepayment of postage and the use of penalty indicia will be discontinued on all official mail entered into United States and military postal channels. Instead a two-line indicia reading "Postage and Fees Paid, Department of the Army" will be used. The mark will represent payment of all classes of regular postage, airmail postage, registry, insurance, certified mail and special delivery fees.

Adoption of the new system will eliminate the necessity of weight mail, compute and affix postage, and maintain records of the procurement of penalty matter and the use of postage stamps.

The system has been in effect in the Navy and the Marine Corps for some time.

CofS On "Pentomic"

(General Maxwell D. Taylor, USA, Chief of Staff, gave a highlight report on the Army "Pentomic" divisions in an appearance last week before the Senate Appropriations Committee. Here is what he said:)

"WE visualize that the atomic battlefield of the future will have much greater breadth and depth than battlefields of the past. There will probably be a checkerboard disposition of units with considerable gaps between combat elements. Consequently, all Army units must be trained for all-around combat in the same way that we trained and fought our airborne divisions in World War II.

THE PROBLEM of the ground commander will be to find the enemy, to determine his configuration, and then to destroy him by directing atomic fire upon him, using organic weapons or calling down the fire of distant missiles deployed to the rear. Thereafter the commander will need instant mobility to exploit the effects of this destructive fire.

Modern signal equipment permits a commander to control a larger number of subordinate units than the three which were standard under the old triangular concept. In the new airborne and infantry divisions, we have taken five subordinate units as a reasonable step forward in extending the span of control. This action permits the elimination of one echelon of headquarters with a consequent economy in personnel overhead.

FINALLY, in shaping these new divisions, we have included a capacity for absorbing progressively the new weapons which we expect to emerge in the next few years. In the interim we will equip our divisions with the best weapons available while we expedite the development and production of the optimum types. We will need the help of Congress to press forward in the modernization of these divisions upon whose fighting capacity the success of the Army depends.

MATS Navy Shift

The Military Air Transport Service has announced a major shift involving two of its four naval components. Naval Air Transport Squadron Three (VR 3) will move from U. S. Naval Air Station, Moffett Field, Calif., to McGuire AFB, N. J.

At the same time, Naval Air Transport Squadron Seven (VR 7) will move from Hickam AFB, Hawaii to NAS, Moffett.

The movement, involving some 745 officers and men attached to VR 3 and over 840 VR 7 naval personnel will be completed this summer. VR 7's move will bring the first squadron of R7V (C121) "Super-Constellation" aircraft to the Pacific Coast. MATS has an Air Force Wing flying "Super-Constellations" from its Atlantic Coast base at Charleston AFB, South Carolina.

Presently assigned to Continental Division, VR 3, an R6B (C118) "Liftmaster" Squadron, will join VR 6 which also utilizes this type of transport aircraft at McGuire AFB. Both squadrons will be under the jurisdiction of Atlantic Division, while VR 7 will remain a part of MATS Pacific Division.

This is the third major move that MATS has made from Hickam AFB within the past few months. Last November, the Pacific Division Headquarters of MATS was moved to Parks AFB, Calif. At the present time, the 47th Air Transport Squadron is in the process of moving from Hickam AFB to Travis AFB, Calif.

The movement will leave the 1502d Air Transport Wing, the 1502d Air Transport Group, two Air Force Heavy Transport Squadrons and one MATS Naval Squadron (VR 8) still operating out of Hickam AFB.

Capt. Luker Gets Carrier

Capt. George R. Luker, USN, Chief of Staff to RAdm. Frank Akers, USN, has been named commanding officer of the Sixth Fleet aircraft carrier Lake Champlain.

His successor is Capt. James G. Craig, jr., USN, a 1932 USNA classmate.

Captain Craig has been commanding officer of the Coco Solo Naval Air Station in the Canal Zone for the last 22 months. He will relieve Captain Luker on 6 June.

Captain Luker will take over command of the Lake Champlain in the Mediterranean about 10 July.

Captain Luker's wife, Margaret, and his two children, Ann, 19, and Ned, 16, will live in Carmel, Calif., while his ship is in the Mediterranean.

NAVY REORGANIZES FAR EAST COMMAND

Admiral Felix B. Stump, USN, Commander in Chief, Pacific Fleet, has reorganized the U. S. Navy command structure in the Far East, effective 1 July at the time of the incorporation of the Far East command into his Pacific command.

VAdm. Roscoe F. Good, USN, presently Commander, Naval Forces, Far East, will become Commander, Naval Forces, Japan and the naval component commander of the subordinate unified command in Japan.

RAdm. Albert E. Jarrell, USN, now Commander, Fleet Activities, Yokosuka, Japan, will become Commander U. S. Naval Forces, Korea, reporting directly to the Commander in Chief, U. S. Pacific Fleet. Admiral Jarrell also will serve as the commander of the Naval component of both the United Nations command and the U. S. Forces, Korea, command. In addition, he will be Chief, U. S. Naval Advisory Group, Korea. This group constitutes the principal advisors to the Republic of Korea Navy. Admiral Jarrell will also be the on-call member of the United Nations Military Armistice Commission.

This naval reorganization "will not necessarily result in any reduction of U. S. Naval forces now deployed to the Western Pacific, and none is contemplated at the present time," the Pentagon said. There will be, however, shift of command of deployed Marine Corps and amphibious forces from the Far East command to the Commander in Chief, Pacific Fleet.

RAdm. Kirkpatrick Heads Navy Public Information

RAdm. Charles C. Kirkpatrick, USN, Chief of Staff to Commander, U. S. Taiwan Defense Command, will become Chief of Information, Department of the Navy, in November.

He succeeds RAdm. Edmund B. Taylor, USN, named Commander, Destroyer Force, Atlantic Fleet.

RAdm. Walter G. Schindler, USN, Commander, Naval Forces, Germany, will be detached in July to command the Eighth Naval District at New Orleans.

RAdm. Ulysses S. G. Sharp, USN, will be detached as Commander, Cruiser Division Three in August and report to the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations.

The Marine Corps is cracking down on enlisted men who fail to measure up to standards in the organized Reserve.

In a new Marine Corps Order, Brig. Gen. William W. Stickney, USMCR, Director of the Marine Corps Reserve, told Directors of Marine Corps Reserve and Recruitment Districts to screen members of their commands and to cull out men who have records of less than 90 per cent attendance at Drill Pay Reserve meetings.

Men who have attendance records of 90 per cent or better and who have attended the most recent period of annual field training will be retained in drill pay status. Others will be transferred to the inactive Reserve.

U. S. Air Force

Col. Claude Smith Will Get Pioneer Turbo-Prop Sqdn.

Col. Claude W. Smith, USAF, founder of the 1700th Test Squadron and commander of the 1700th Air Transport Group for the past 25 months, has departed Kelly AFB, Tex., to assume his new post as commander of the 1607th Air Transport Group at Dover AFB, Del.

The 1607th Air Transport Group will be the first Air Force unit to receive the four-engine Douglas C-133A turbo-prop transport for operational use.

In September 1954, Colonel Smith organized the 1700th Test Squadron (Turbo-Prop) to service test three turbo-prop powerplant combinations in proven test bed aircraft. Soon after the receipt of the first turbo-prop transports and after an extensive schooling program had been established for the personnel of the squadron, Colonel Smith was assigned as commander of the Transport Group.

As commander of the test squadron, Colonel Smith designed the test program to bring about an operational doctrine for the implementation of the turbo-prop transport aircraft in the Air Force.

The squadron has tested the Convair YC-131C powered by two Allison T-56 engines and Aero-Products propellers, the Boeing YC-97J powered by four Pratt and Whitney T-34 engines and Curtiss-Wright turboelectric propellers, and the Lockheed YC-121F with four T-34 engines and Hamilton Standard hydramatic propellers.

A veteran pilot with more than 7-200 hours, Colonel Smith has attended the Allison, Pratt and Whitney, Lockheed and Douglas schools for turbo-prop aircraft and powerplants.

In discussing his new assignment, Colonel Smith said, "This will be the first opportunity MATS has had to go into truly profitable low cost non stop transatlantic operations, in preparing for their D-Day mission of providing strategic airlift for all of the Armed Forces."

Prior to his turbo-prop command, Colonel Smith was commander of a squadron of Boeing C-97 Stratofreighters in the Pacific Division of MATS. In this assignment, he participated in the exploration of the jet stream.

Allies Salute Gen. Lee
As He Leaves For U.S.

Honor guards at more than 20 bases in the three national commands of Fourth Allied Tactical Air Force in Europe have turned out to receive Maj. Gen. Robert M. Lee, USAF, during his farewell visits.

Maj. Gen. Lee

After commanding Fourth ATAF 3½ years, General Lee will leave for the U. S. and command of the Ninth Air Force.

Maj. Gen. Edward J. Timberlake, USAF, presently commanding the Ninth, will succeed General Lee.

At each base in the U. S. Twelfth Air Force, RCAF

One Air Division and French Air Force Premier Commandement Aerien Tactique (Premier CATAC) on his wide swing through France and Germany, General Lee spoke to formations of officers and men. He praised them for their contribution to Fourth ATAF's five years of steady progress.

During the first round of visits General and Mrs. Lee were guests at a dinner given in Metz, France, by Air Vice Marshal H. B. Godwin, One Air Division commander, in honor of Air Marshal C. Roy Slemmon, RCAF chief of staff.

Earlier, General Lee had visited bases of Premier CATAC at Cognac, Luxeuil, Dijon, Metz and Rheims with Maj. Gen. Paul M. Stehlin, commander of the French contribution to Fourth ATAF. They were accompanied by Maj. Gen. Jacques L. Martin, FAF, Fourth ATAF deputy commander.

At Rheims, General Lee was a guest with General Jean E. Valluy, French Army, Commander of Allied Forces Central Europe, at a luncheon given by Colonel Gabriel Gauthier, Rheims Air Base commander.

General Lee assumed command of NATO's Fourth ATAF in November 1953. Until a year ago he also commanded Twelfth Air Force. He was succeeded at the U. S. command by Maj. Gen. John K. Gerhart, USAF, his host on his current visits to Twelfth Air Force bases.

Ninth Air Force, his new assignment, is a familiar command to General Lee. During World War II he was deputy CG for operations of the command in France.

GENERAL THOMAS D. WHITE, USAF, (right), Air Force Vice Chief of Staff, accepts from Ned H. Dearborn, President of the National Safety Council, the Award of Honor given to the Air Force (for the seventh consecutive year) for reducing ground accidents. At the left is Lt. Gen. Emmett O'Donnell, USAF, Deputy Chief of Staff, Personnel, and next to him is Mr. Will L. Tubbs.

TAC's World-Wide Striking Power
Seen Real Deterrent To Aggression

ST. LOUIS, MO. Since Korea, the Tactical Air Command has developed and tested a new concept of "composite air strike forces," designed to operate with a minimum of support at great distances from the United States, and to serve as a deterrent for "brush fire" wars, just as the Strategic Air Command serves as a deterrent for full scale war.

Thus General O. P. Weyland, USAF, TAC's commander, described the newly developed capability to a meeting of the Aviation Writers Association at the McDonnell Aircraft plant here. He declared that "the primary purpose of this force is not to fight. It is a deterrent force. If it can arrive in time there will be no aggressive move on the part of the opposing nation."

"Now that this power is available in America's arsenal," General Weyland said, "I believe this nation, and the nations of the world, have a greater chance of fulfilling their desire for peace than at any other time in recent years, or history for that matter."

"It was our tactical air forces that met Soviet equipment in Korea and we won the war in the air," he said. It was during that war, the general related that the new concept emerged. Before that "we had been concerned mainly with three factors in our operations—air superiority, interdiction, and close combat support of surface forces."

IMMEDIATELY AFTER KOREA, he reported, TAC went to work on its new plan. To show its current readiness, General Weyland described recent exercises in Panama where a squadron of a bomb group from Virginia took part in a large combined exercise with little more than a day's notice. Fighter-bombers from Texas went non-stop 4,000 miles to participate.

General Weyland used a hypothetical situation to show how the plan works. "Suppose," he said, "Nation X has military forces massing on its border and indications are that a land invasion is imminent."

"From prepared plans we can determine the size of the strike force needed to deal with the situation."

"The entire initial combat and support element can then be committed with little more than a few telephone calls. Routes and refueling points are selected from prepared plans through previous tests."

"The entire aerial movement may be timed to arrive at Nation X so that operations can begin immediately if necessary."

STRIKE FORCES, he said, contain day fighters, fighter-bombers, light tactical bombers, tankers, and cargo aircraft. They carry all needed supplies and spare parts for maintenance and support. They can use tactical nuclear weapons or conventional weapons, as the situation demands.

"It is possible," he said, "we will operate our strike forces only to provide the balance of power in favor of resisting ground forces of the country under attack. A strong counter-blow against the enemy built up area may so effectively reduce his capability that friendly ground forces would only need minor assistance to carry out a successful counterattack and hold the lines until such time as the United Nations could either solve the problem or place an adequate police force in the area."

"THE POWER, MOBILITY AND FLEXIBILITY of these forces," he asserted, "constitute a weapon system with an entirely new order of efficiency and the ability to deal with any situation that may present itself."

"Two checkmates have been placed before the Communists," General Weyland declared, "a global war has been effectively blocked and now limited wars have an equally effective deterrent. They may start, but the Soviets must realize they have a small and decreasing chance for success."

310th Bomb Wing Wins
8th AF's Selser Trophy

The new Maj. Gen. James C. Selser, Jr. Memorial Trophy will be awarded to the 310th Bombardment Wing of Schilling AFB, Kans., for best performance in Pacesetter VII. It has been announced by Maj. Gen. Walter C. Sweeney, Jr., Eighth Air Force Commander.

Pacesetter was the name adopted for periodic evaluation missions conducted for the purpose of increasing combat effectiveness of Eighth Air Force and developing a competitive spirit among combat wings.

The Major Lacie C. Neighbors Memorial Trophy will go for the second time in a row to the 26th Strategic Reconnaissance Wing of Lockbourne AFB, Ohio, for the best record in the reconnaissance phase. The Selser Trophy is named for the former deputy commander of Eighth Air Force who was killed in an aircraft accident in the Potomac River near Bolling Air Force Base, Washington, D. C., in November 1956. It replaces the Brig. Gen. Jack Roberts Memorial Trophy which is now permanent property of the 340th Bomb Wing of Whiteman AFB, Mo., having been won by that organization three times.

The Neighbors Trophy was named for the aircraft commander of an RB-47 of the 26th which was lost over the Aleutian Islands in April 1955. Official presentation of the awards will be made at Westover in the near future.

Pacesetter VII included navigation and bombing runs over Atlanta, Ga., Little Rock, Ark., and Seymour, Ind.

Lt. Col. Spence Commended

Lt. Col. George G. Spence, USAF, Director of Special Investigations for the Northeast Air Command from August 1955 until April of 1957, recently was awarded the Commendation Ribbon.

"Cut Directly Into Defense." Congressional cuts in the Defense budget, it is now shown, will meet the vigorous opposition of President Eisenhower. The $2.5 billion cut recommended by the House Appropriations Committee will have a rough time surviving the opposition of the White House.

Looking back, now, upon the President's earlier attitude, in which he, in effect, invited Congress to make cuts, it seems evident that the President at that time attributed to Congress the same understanding of the national security problem that he himself possessed. Now that it is apparent that this is not so, General Eisenhower is aroused.

In his press conference last week, the President analyzed the cuts recommended by the House Committee. He pointed out that $1.3 billion of the reduction is "not a budget cut at all, it is reducing balances and funds that are reserves under which the Defense Department operates." This, he said, "we will try to live with, reserving the right, if those reserves go down to the danger point, that we have to go back to Congress."

But as to the remaining $1.2 billion of the recommended reduction, the President was positive—"it is going to cut directly into defense." Somewhere, he declared, programs in aircraft procurement, guided missile development are going to have to suffer if it stands.

"As long as I am in a fight," he declared, "I never rest until I get—until the United States gets—what I believe my associates and I believe, to be necessary for the operation of this government, for the protection of ourselves in this critical world and for the waging of peace." And then he added, "I shall never stop until a decision has been reached."

How effective have his appeals to the people been, the President was asked. He admitted that before his talks, correspondence reaching the White House had been largely critical of the size of the budget. Now, he says, it is very much in favor of his stand. "I do know," he asserted, "they at least clear my conscience in an effort to make America see what I believe to be necessary for our welfare."

The President's weakness in respect to his defense budget has been his confidence that others were as aware and as concerned as he has been with the National Defense picture. His discovery that this is not so and that he must put more push and punch behind his defense budget comes a little late, but there is an excellent chance that his prestige will cut the damage to a minimum.

Honor General Pershing. At long last there is to be a memorial to keep fresh the memory of one of America's greatest soldiers—General of the Armies John J. Pershing. A long, narrow block facing on historic Pennsylvania Avenue in downtown Washington, D. C., has been approved as the site. It will be developed as a park, named in honor of General Pershing, and will contain a small monument to his memory. The area is on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue between 14th and 15th streets Northwest. In July 1948, hundreds of mourners stood in the rain along the borders of this very area to watch as the flag-draped caisson carrying General Pershing's body moved slowly on its way to Arlington National Cemetery. Virtually every important and ceremonial procession in the Nation's Capital, including all the Inaugural parades, pass there.

The selection is the result of an Act passed by the last Congress authorizing the Battle Monuments Commission to prepare plans and estimates for the Pershing Memorial. This selection itself was a tribute to the General because the Battle Monuments Commission, which he headed from its inception until his death, was close to General Pershing's heart. Through it he directed the construction of monuments and cemeteries in Europe for the American dead who lost their lives in the great war which he led to victory.

The Battle Monuments Commission selected this site under the Chairmanship of General of the Army George C. Marshall, USA, who as a young officer served on General Pershing's staff in WWI and went on to direct the destinies of the U. S. Army in WWII and to further serve his country as Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense.

Since that selection the plan has been approved

READERS' VIEWS

(Letters to the Editor must have author's name and address, but name will be omitted on publication if writer so states. Longer letters may be extracted for publication.)

Pay For Retired Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I want to go on record as being against any general Pay bill unless retired personnel are given equal consideration.

I believe one or more things are overlooked when these Government appointed committees meet to consider ways and means which will tend to keep personnel in the armed forces. As one who has served a number of years both as enlisted man and officer (over 30 years' total), I feel qualified to tell the way I felt toward the armed forces while serving and still feel.

First—Congress has taken away most all PX and commissary privileges by listening to the Retail Merchants Assn. The Post Exchanges and Commissaries should be put on same basis that they were on 20 years ago.

Second—A military man wants suitable living quarters in peacetime under routine conditions. He doesn't want to live in a shack at high rent as many are doing now. He wants an even break on foreign assignments. He should be tried by military courts, not foreign courts. Regulations regarding wearing of civilian clothing should be liberal as possible. Food for men messing in barracks or field should be good as possible.

These things are morale builders and without morale, you haven't anything.

GEO. H. BATHEY,
MAJ., USAF-RET.

Professional Morale Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The best propagandists to win friends, recruits and officers for the services are high-morale, professional soldiers and officers.

Everything should be done to make them sell a good story to the American people. This certainly cannot be done where the Pentagon, the President and/or Congress do little or nothing to help, but conversely at times seem to do everything in their power to hinder that particular group. Needless to say "DDE" is an exception to this.

I shall not mention herein the oft-told tales of loss of privileges and increasing of expense burdens, but rather will cover one or two other gripes of which I have had personal experience.

In 1953 I was retired as an Officer of the Regular Army after over 39 years service and with a Physical Disability Retirement of 70% (later raised to 80% by VA and now approaching 100%). Upon my retirement I was presented a "Certificate of Retirement" (DD Form 363A, 1 Aug 50), a rather sorry looking document (about 8 1/2 by 10 1/2) after all that service; together with a flimsy document about the same size called "Report of Separation from the Armed Forces of the United States" (DD Form 214, 1 Jul 52). This latter supposedly being a statement of my service does, in fact, cover certain phases of my entire service in that it gives me credit for time in WW-I, but covers no information on Campaign Ribbons, DSC or Purple Heart won in that War; even though by the National Capital Planning Commission and the Fine Arts Commission. Now Mr. Hatfield Chilson, Under Secretary of the Interior, has advised Brig. Gen. Thomas North, USA, Secretary of the Battle Monuments Commission, that the Department of the Interior is anxious "to cooperate to the fullest extent in order that an appropriate memorial to General Pershing may be developed in harmony with the Federal park reservations in the Nation's Capital."

Democracy's great leaders are too often forgotten. It is not only an honor to this great General, but a gift to posterity, that his devotion and great accomplishments shall be kept before the Nation in this manner.

QUOTES FROM THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago (31 May 1947)—With far seeing recognition of the basic importance of science to the National Defense, the House Appropriation Committee has allowed both the Army and Navy the full amount requested in the Budget estimates for research and development. The War Department appropriation bill provides $22,216,400 for research and development with the statement that the Committee "feels that a research program must be planned on a long-range basis and that research money should flow evenly year after year in order to retain the maximum results from a minimum of funds."

50 Years Ago (1 June 1907)—The Navy sensibly proposes to confine the President in his selection of Navy officers of the rank of commander for the command of squadrons to those recommended by a board of competent officers as fitted by temperament and training for squadron commands. Even this method of selection is not wholly free from objection, but it is better than the plan of committing selection to any single man who, whatever may be his intelligence and his disinterested purpose, can hardly be expected to have the technical knowledge and the intimate acquaintance with the comparative merits of officers to always choose wisely.

90 Years Ago (1 June 1867)—The Mexican news is decisive. Queretaro, after having been reported as captured many times, has at last fallen in truth, and Maximilian, with Mejia and Castello, are prisoners, having, it is said, surrendered unconditionally. The occupation of the City of Mexico by the Liberals, and the restoration of the Republic, will now follow close on the heels of the downfall of Queretaro.

TAGO had a complete record of my service, authorized me both of these decorations and for years showed them opposite my name in the "Official Army Register." Thus, in order to prove any service before 1920 I must have with me at all times, papers nearly 40 years old, merely because it is "against the policy of TAGO" to combine two periods of service, even for a Professional Army Officer. Cannot such policies be changed by the office which made them so as to give the professional one decent looking paper containing all his record of service.

Those of us who have served in combat feel that any little recognition of that fact is a morale-raiser. Why is it then that those of us who served in close combat in WW-I have never received the Combat Infantry Badge we all admire? (I understand some Congressman has introduced a bill to cover this, but will it go through?) To the best of my belief it is one of the few decorations which was not made retroactive as was the SS, PH and others. The fact that it was not, together with WW-II cheapening of various decorations is, in my opinion, a vital morale factor in the services.

Would it not be wise for the Services to survey selected groups of old-time professional officers and soldiers with a view to obtaining their gripes and recommendations leading toward higher morale of the men who can be the best propagandists to win more interest, loyalty and love for a professional military career?

"Very Much Disturbed," Says Secretary Brucker As He Fights For Army Funds

Secretary Wilber M. Brucker has told the Senate Appropriations Committee that he is "very much disturbed" over cuts in the Army's fiscal '58 budget request.

Testifying last week before the Senate Appropriations Committee, Secretary Brucker expressed the fear that "the reductions indicated will have severe impact on many of our activities."

Specifically, he made the following points in support of his contention that money cut by the House should be restored:

I. IN THE MILITARY PAY APPROPRIATIONS, a reduction of $36 million is proposed. Such a reduction is completely inconsistent and at variance with the Fiscal Year 1957 appropriation and actual requirements for military pay and allowances. In Fiscal Year 1957, there was an appropriation for $3,571 billion (including the $4 million Deutschmark equivalent received from Germany). At the time of the President's budget presentation, the Bureau of the Budget estimated we would need $3,533 billion in spite of the Army's insistence that the full amount plus a supplemental was necessary. At about the time our presentations were made to the House Committee, we were informed by the Bureau that the full appropriated amount of $3,571 billion was finally accepted as our requirement. In the past few weeks our judgment as to the supplemental need for $27 million was vindicated by the Bureau of the Budget, and has been included in the third Supplemental Bill for Fiscal Year 1957 as passed by the Senate.

This means that our total requirement for Fiscal Year 1957 is $3,598 billion, whereas for Fiscal Year 1958 the House Committee proposes to cut $36 million from the $3,549 billion requested for Fiscal Year 1958, which was already lower than Fiscal Year 1957 by $49 million. In addition, prices in both clothing and subsistence have gone up since the original computations last fall by an amount of approximately $9 million, and railroad and MSTs rates have gone up to the extent that they will generate an estimated additional requirement of about $12 million. These increased costs on top of a cut of $36 million leaves the Army in a difficult and unenviable position. We believe the full amount for Military Personnel Army in the President's Budget is a definite and necessary requirement.

II. IN THE OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE APPROPRIATION, the $150 million reduction proposed by the House Committee is most serious in its implications and constitutes a disaster to the Army's standards. The Operations and Maintenance Appropriation of $3.4 billion as shown in the President's Budget is that which is required to provide for the day to day living of the Army. I assure you I have no way of absorbing a reduction of the magnitude proposed by the House Committee except by a drastic curtailment of essentials. Even though the full appropriation were authorized the Army would not be able to reduce its present backlog of deferred maintenance, which would increase by our estimate from a projected $70 million at the end of Fiscal Year 1957 to $84 million at the end of Fiscal Year 1958.

Any reduction in available funds will further reduce the standard of living of our soldiers and cause more rapid deterioration of our physical plant. Besides the morale effect on our troops, this would appear to be false economy.

Our rebuild activities will be reduced to the extent that the support of our increasing Reserve Forces, which comes from the Operations and Maintenance Appropriation, will be cut back from a barely adequate to an inadequate level; our communications and communications security programs which we have already cut back from our initial budget submission of last December to a barely adequate amount will also be reduced to an unacceptable degree; our field maintenance backlogs will grow to the extent that usable equipment will be unavailable because of lack of repair.

A further effect of the proposed reduction will be the necessity for discharging approximately 20,000 civilian employees with all the loss of skills, techniques and capabilities which are inherent in an efficient civilian work force.

Consideration also will have to be given to the closing of several major posts, camps, and stations. Many factors introduce themselves here, including the training load requirements and the important fact that even though we close installations in Fiscal Year 1958, we will be able to realize little if any savings in that year. Our experience has been that in closing an installation in any year, the expected savings are at least offset and sometimes more so by the closing costs—the putting of the buildings and equipment into stand-by status, the transfer costs of personnel and equipment to another station, the large costs of discharge of civilian personnel when it becomes necessary to pay for unused leave—savings are not really realized until succeeding years.

Also, I would like to say a word about support from the Operations and Maintenance appropriation for our Reserve Components. We have gone all out in using the Operations and Maintenance appropriation to support the Reserve program, which, as you all know, has been highly successful and greatly expanded, especially in numbers of six months trainees. Although the pay, clothing, and subsistence for these trainees come from the National Guard and Reserve Personnel Army appropriations, the cost of the actual training and special schooling, the elements of support such as barracks maintenance, utilities, equipment maintenance, and supplies, and the morale and welfare support come from the O&M appropriation where this reduction of $150 million is proposed. I am especially concerned about being able to give these thousands of fine young men the best training possible and being able to provide them decent living facilities and support.

This proposed reduction of $150 million strikes right at the heart of our day to day operations and would have a very adverse effect on all the things that help to keep up the morale and effectiveness of our forces.

III. It is proposed by the House Committee that our RESERVE PERSONNEL APPROPRIATION be cut by $10 million. While this seems relatively small, it comes at a time when we are trying desperately to increase the size and effectiveness of our Reserve Forces. We are already finding it difficult to operate within the Fiscal Year 1957 budget limitation. Accordingly, any reduction will positively mean a reduction in the whole Reserve Program. It will necessarily result in turning away 17 to 18½ year old volunteers for six months training, which would be tragic. A reduction in the program at this critical time would provide such a severe setback as to jeopardize seriously the future Reserve Program.

IV. With respect to Research and Development, the House Committee proposes a reduction of $8 million. This also may seem small, but it will require major reductions in our research in the areas of biological and chemical warfare and medicine, in research in materials, terminal ballistics, and rocket propellants, these latter being fundamental to progress toward adequate defense of the nation against the Intercontinental Ballistic Missile. It will reduce developments in the field of fire-power and in support of Army mobility, both air and ground. These reductions in research will restrict and reduce our advances in areas where progress must be made and pushed rapidly if we are to keep abreast of scientific advances with which our potential enemies are acquainted, and by the exploitation of which our scientists can further promote the efficiency of our Army and the security of our nation.

V. The proposal to reduce the funds requested for the operation of the ALASKA COMMUNICATION SYSTEM by 12% is likewise small but significant. It was necessary to ask for a $700,000 increase for Fiscal Year 1958 in this appropriation, $137,000 of which was for the mandatory requirement to provide for the government's contribution to the Civil Service retirement system. Prior to this budget, such a contribution had been carried in the appropriation of the Civil Service Commission, and now it is placed upon the Army which has no funds for this added burden. The other major increase of $511,000 in this appropriation is caused by the cost of operation of the greatly enlarged facility resulting from the completion of the Seattle-Ketchikan-Skagway coaxial submarine cable project which was authorized by the Congress and has been under construction since 1954. The comment in the House Committee Report that there may be a justification for increases in rates is wholly beside the point because operational receipts from customers are deposited in the U.S. Treasury and are not available to the Army for operational purposes. If such a reduction were to become finalized, the Army would not be in a position to offer the services by which it might obtain greater revenues for the Treasury.

IN SUMMARY, the Army's direct obligation request of $9,721 billion for Fiscal Year 1958, as shown in the President's Budget, is actually about $100 million less than Fiscal Year 1957. Within that already reduced amount we will have to finance a number of expensive and mandatory items which were either financed for a half year only or not at all in Fiscal Year 1957. Included are the following additional burdens:

a. Civil Service Retirement (PL 854)	$ 85 million
b. Dependent Medical Care (PL 569)	19 million
c. Survivor's Benefits Payments (PL 861)	48 million
d. Greatly increased reserve component program (including vastly increased numbers of 6-month trainees, all in accordance with the Reserve Forces Act of 1955)	81 million
e. Transfer of Army Aviation functions to the Army from the Air Force effective July 1, 1957	49 million
f. Railroad and MSTs rate increase	24 million

TOTAL$306 million

Also due to the problems of inflation and its effect, we will be able to buy millions of dollars less in goods and services with the money requested than we planned when we developed the budget, or in comparison with previous years. To this extent, this is a further reduction of Army funds.

I would like to emphasize that the Army is not in the position most government agencies have found themselves this year; that is, we are one of the few seeking less funds than in Fiscal Year 1957. In addition, it should be borne in mind that we continue to return to the U.S. Treasury large amounts from sales of excess stock fund items. In Fiscal Year 1958, we will return $350 million to the U.S. Treasury. In Fiscal Year 1957, we returned $357 million plus $202 million transferred to the Army Construction account.

I would like to add a word about civilian personnel. Again the record will show that the civilian strength in support of the military functions of the Army has shown a reduction each year for the past five years and again for Fiscal Year 1958.

Within our reduction of the civilian personnel program, we have cut back in numerous places to provide the essential civilian support to the increasing Reserve program, the growing Anti-Aircraft program, and others. I hope you will note the Army again is one of the few government departments that has shown continued reduction in civilian personnel.

THE AIR FORCE WILL BE HURT MOST if budget cuts on Capitol Hill force the Defense Department to submerge completely any pay increase from the already watered-down foundering version of the Cordiner Report. The Services have stated, with DoD approval, that instructions would be sent to the field within about a month regarding plans for implementing the "proficiency pay" boost for enlisted personnel. This could mean increases from $12 to $50 per month for up to 360,000 Servicemen. BUT SECDEF WILSON NOW WARNS (Page 1) that the pay incentive plan is jeopardized by budget cuts voted in the House Appropriations Committee. It may have to be dropped, he cautions.

THE PENTAGON HAD PLANNED for the Air Force to receive $19 million of the $49 million allocated for "proficiency pay" during the first year. From the outset, with General LeMay's SAC in the lead, the Air Force has fought hardest among all the Services for "proficiency pay." If it becomes necessary to abandon the announced plan, morale in all Services will tumble, but the Air Force will be hit hardest.

A SERVICE-WIDE CONCLUSION: If action is not taken by top Defense officials to keep the Cordiner Plan alive by public discussion of the problem and by continuing studies to maintain all data up-to-the-minute, and if Congressional pay raise support does not grow quickly, the widespread summation among Service families will be that it would have been better to leave the pay issue alone during this session of Congress. Hopes were raised, then dashed. A CAREFULLY DEVELOPED PLAN was given summary treatment at the hands of the Budget Bureau. Now, it could turn out that the Pentagon will be forced by budget cuts to renege on "proficiency pay."

A MATERNITY CARE PROBLEM threatens to cause a commotion in the Family Medical Care Plan. Physicians who are responsible for maternity cases are challenging the decision which denies dental care to Service families in the U. S., except under emergency conditions. OBSTETRICIANS TAKE THE POSITION that they "deem it necessary that their obstetrical patients have good dental care during pregnancy." The Defense Department has asked help on this problem from the Dependents' Medical Care Advisory Committee.

SERVICE FAMILIES HAVE PAID almost $1.7 million in hospital costs since inception of the Family Medical Care program on 7 Dec. 1956. The Government has been charged $6.5 million as its share of the cost for 64,721 hospital claims covering 310,660 days of hospitalization. AVERAGE COST of physician claims is $68.50 for 73,689 cases. Defense experts estimate that the cost per patient day, including hospital and physician, is about $50; cost per case totals about $250. AIR FORCE FAMILIES account for 42.8 per cent of the civilian hospital load; Army, 27 per cent; Navy and Marine Corps, 28.2 per cent, with 2 per cent in the Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey or Public Health Service.

THE ARMY REMAINS STYMIED in efforts to release information on the new antiaircraft missile called the Hawk; it is intended to shoot down low-flying planes. Both SecDef Wilson and Army Sec'y. Brucker have mentioned the Hawk by name, but details are still being "coordinated."

ARMY UNIFORM UNIFORMITY will be lacking during the transition period from Olive Drab to the new Army Green. The switch begins 1 July in enlisted ranks when new soldiers will be issued one O.D. and one Green uniform. By 1 October, 1958, the plan is to start issue of two Army Greens to new men, eliminating the O.D. from the initial allowance. ON THAT DATE, soldiers now in active service must have at least one Army Green. The schedule calls for elimination of the OD-33 uniform completely as of 1 October 1960. FROM OCTOBER '58-OCTOBER '60, it's obvious that at many formations, some soldiers will be wearing O.D., while others are attired in the Army Green. Commanders can require one or the other (O.D. before '58; Army Green thereafter) if sufficient advance notice is given to permit soldiers to prepare the required garb. However, commanders are under strict warning not to coerce soldiers into buying uniforms prior to the required dates.

IN ANOTHER UNIFORM DEVELOPMENT, the Army has revealed to the field that the sewn-in crease in the trousers (shorts) worn with the summer garrison cotton uniform (abbreviated), requires more time for pressing and may shorten the wear life of the trousers (shorts). IN THE FUTURE, the sewn-in crease will be eliminated in procurement of "trousers, summer, cotton, uniform twill, khaki, Army shade No. 1, abbreviated (shorts)." Persons who now have shorts with sewn-in creases are advised in Circular 670-13 that the problem can be remedied. They are "authorized at their option to remove this feature . . . by removal of the thread holding the crease in place."

A FURTHER CUTBACK in permanent changes of station in all Services can be expected as a result of Congressional action on the military budget. House Appropriations members have been adamant for the past several years in denying full PCS funds asked by the Pentagon. Fiscal '58 is no different. Each of the Armed Forces again has been told to quit shifting personnel around so much.

THE ARMY SIGNAL CORPS, hard pressed to fill its billets requirements, will recall to active duty more than 400 officers during the next 12 months. Approximately 100 personnel from other Services have transferred to the Army Signal Corps during recent months.

NOBSKA IS THE CODE NAME for a recently completed Navy project involving a rigorous evaluation of all facets of overseas warfare. A distinguished group of scientists and engineers—about 60 in all—worked for almost three months on the study and came up with a number of conclusions and recommendations which are highly classified. In general, however, the report confirmed to a large degree the work already being done by the Navy in the field of antisubmarine warfare, Congress has been told.

THE FUEL-INJECTION ENGINE of the Army's new T-92 light tank is expected to increase the vehicle's range to 150 miles. The tank is 30 per cent lighter than its predecessor, the M-41. It weighs only 18 tons.

COMBAT SOCKS for Army troops may come in only three sizes in the future. The Quartermaster Corps is perfecting a new cushioned-sole stretch sock which, within the three-size limitation, will fit any foot. Large mass tests will be conducted before the sock is officially adopted. Similar work is being done on wool glove inserts.

Navy Authorizes Wear
Of Philippine Citation

The Navy has granted authority for wearing of the Philippine Republic Presidential Unit Citation Badge.

Although the award was tendered by the Philippine Government in 1948, the phraseology used in the accompanying citation implied that the ribbon had been awarded as a personal decoration. As such, it would have been necessary to have Congressional approval for wearing of the citation. A recent review of the matter, however, permitted the Navy to authorize qualified officers and men to don the ribbon.

The units cited were those engaged in defense of the Philippines between 7 Dec.
1941 and 5 May 1942; units which participated in the liberation campaign during 1944 and 1945; and submarines that maintained physical contact with guerrilla forces during the Japanese occupation.

Entitled to wear the Philippine award are all ships and units which earned engagement stars P3, P31, P32, P39 and P41, as listed in NavPers 15790.

In addition, officers and men who served aboard the listed submarines during the indicated periods, may put on the new ribbon:

USS Angler (20-21 March 1944); USS Black-fin (14-18 Nov. 1944); USS Bowfin (2-30 Sept.
1943); USS Cero (17 Oct.-2 Nov. 1944) USS Crevalle (7-19 May 1944); USS Gar (13 Nov.-
11 Dec. 1944); USS Grayling (31 July-23 Aug.
1943); USS Gudgeon (1 Jan.-30 April 1943);
USS Gunnel (2 Dec. 1944); USS Hake
(5 Dec. 1944); USS Narwhal (25 Nov 1943-
2 Nov. 1944); USS Nautilus (29 May 1944-24
Jan. 1945); USS Ray (26 Oct.-1 Nov. 1944);
USS Redfin (26 May-31 Aug. 1944); USS Sea-wolf (1 Aug.-6 Oct. 1944); USS Stingray (16
Aug. 1944-1 Jan. 1945); USS Tambor (18 Feb.-
5 March 1943); and, USS Trout (12 July 1943).

RAMAC Goes Into Military Service; Processes 10,000 Transactions In 8 Hours

A RANDOM Access Memory Accounting Machine (RAMAC) has been installed and activated at the U.S. Army Medical Depot, Louisville, Ky.

RAMAC, an accounting machine with calculating ability, uses an entirely new concept of operations—high capacity random access storage.

The project originated about a year ago with a letter from Assistant Secretary of Defense W. J. McNeil approving installation of the RAMAC at the depot for the purpose of testing the equipment for the Department of Defense. Mr. McNeil said it is anticipated that flexibility of the equipment, and the operation on a continuous in-line processing (instead of in batches) will permit more effective integration of stock control, financial inventory accounting and related items.

The machine is one of four now in operation in the world.

Machine components consist of a magnetic disk memory which stores 5,000,000 characters, any one of which can be located in a maximum time of six-tenths of a second; card reader-printer which feeds information into the system and also prepares printed reports at the rate of 3,000 characters per minute; card punch which is an output device and punches up to eight thousand characters per minute; processing unit which consists of magnetic drum for working storage, magnetic core buffer through which information is transferred and the control circuits for data handling and arithmetic, and the supervisory station consisting of a typewriter, keyboard, signal lights, and control keys.

ADVANTAGES OF RAMAC for supply distribution include substantial personnel reduction (on availability edit alone, one machine can edit the same number of line items as approximately 30 offset plan editors), immediate expansion for mobilization through existing machine capacity rather than costly, time consuming personnel recruitment and training, and the ability to obtain at high speed any record stored in the memory, making possible the posting of transactions as they occur.

Operating speeds of the machine units are slow when compared with other electronic calculators. However, most operations may be overlapped, so that at a given instant the machine may be printing out and punching the results of one transaction, assembling the following transaction in the processing unit, seeking a record in the random-access memory and reading in information from a card for later processing.

THE MACHINE WILL completely process about ten thousand transactions in an eight hour day. From the time that punch cards start feeding information into RAMAC until all functions of a single page shipping document—reading, processing, printing—are completed requires a maximum time of thirty seconds.

Maj. Harry T. Whitaker is the Project Officer in charge of the RAMAC program. He and his wife, the former Julia Ann Keith of Louisville, live at 5103 Southside Drive.

INDUSTRY IN DEFENSE

Industry Displays Communication & Electronic Systems At AFCEA Meet

A number of communications and electronics systems and devices, having military application, were shown for the first time at the 11th Annual Convention of the Armed Forces Communications and Electronics Association, held at the Sheraton-Park Hotel, Washington, D. C., on 20, 21 and 22 May.

A miniature multiple-channel telephone carrier system—the first of its kind made available for military use—was displayed by the Lenkurt Electric Co., of San Carlos, Calif. The compact new "tactical telephone terminal" was developed for the U. S. Army Signal Corps. Designed for use in military vehicles, the transistorized system is about one-seventh the size and one-third the weight of similar equipment now in use. The terminal provides four voice channels and an order wire for either radio or cable transmission. Four experimental models have been sent to the U. S. Army Signal Engineering Laboratories, Fort Monmouth, N. J.

The General Telephone Laboratories, of Chicago, Ill., showed an automatic teletypewriter system which is being used in the Signal Corps Army Command and Administrative Network. Models have been installed at Headquarters, Fifth Army in Chicago, and at Headquarters, Sixth Army, Davis, Calif. The systems receive teletypewriter messages from geographically remote areas and distribute the communications to local and other remote stations and offices of the Network.

Federal Telecommunication Laboratories, Nutley, N. J., exhibited the recently declassified Tacan Automatic Reporting and Data Link "over-the-horizon" microwave, broad-band, communication system, which is being evaluated by the Navy. Aircraft equipped with the Tacan system automatically and continually report their identity, position, altitude, course, and speed to an air traffic controller.

Fairchild Camera and Instrument Corp., N. Y., displayed its Automatic Voice Data Link which converts data compiled by an "electronic brain" into voice messages. The model exhibited was designed to be used with an early warning system. The stored vocabulary contains all the words necessary to command an aircraft engaged in an intercept mission. A typical message might be "Red Leader, Vector One Nine Zero, Angeles Two Zero." The canned voice message is preceded by a "beep" signal to alert the pilot.

The Stromberg-Carlson Division of General Dynamics Corp., Rochester, N. Y.,

showed an air traffic control system, known as LABIL (Light Aircraft Binary Information Link), which permits an aircraft pilot to transmit automatically 13 separate categories of flight information to a control tower with the flip of a switch. The LABIL system weighs only 25 pounds and transmits messages in two seconds. The ground unit is equipped with a teletypewriter which requires 20 seconds to print the data at a normal rate.

The General Bronze Corp., Garden City, N. Y., displayed standard 60, 90 and 120-foot parabolas for scatter propagation, radio telescope and special radar applications. The designs are suitable for pedestal mechanisms which allow accurate orientation of the antenna for radar and interstellar space studies.

General Electric's Light Military Electronic Equipment Department, Utica, N. Y., showed an adapter for synchronous communications. The adapter improves performance in the presence of ionospheric turbulence and affords better communications reliability in long-range links.

The Bell & Gossett Co., Morton Grove, Ill., put its Dualex air traffic control signaling system on display. The system was designed to fulfill the needs of long-range aircraft operation such as are encountered over the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. The ATC computer shows the position of all aircraft in its area. It interrogates each plane at regular intervals and corrects courses when necessary.

Miles Reproducer Co., Inc., N. Y., offered its "Walkie-Recordall," a miniature Conference Recorder-Transcriber. The device is small enough to be carried in a brief-case and picks up and records the voice within a 60-foot radius, screening interferences such as typing, coughing, air-conditioners and traffic. The unit operates on self-contained standard dry batteries costing a penny an hour.

The Superior Electric Co., Bristol, Conn., exhibited a Powerstat variable transformer which is adaptable to planes, ships and missiles. The transformer is designed for single and three-phase, 400/800 cycle operation. They operate at altitudes up to 50,000 feet and in relative humidity up to 95 per cent.

Universal Transistor Products Corp., N. Y., demonstrated a series of compact, all-electronic power supplies which can be used in rockets, missiles, infra-red, telemetering, airborne electronics equipment and communications equipment.

Martin Has Portable Jet Noise Suppressor

A low cost portable jet engine muffler designed to reduce the noise of jet aircraft engines operating on military and civilian airports has been developed by The Martin Company, it was announced at a meeting of the Acoustical Society of America in New York City. Edward J. Kirchman, Martin acoustical design engineer, said the new muffler has proven effective in holding down the noise of jet engine run-ups on a variety of aircraft. The muffler has also been designed to overcome the high cost, high weight and handling difficulties common to many existing jet silencers, he said.

The muffler's chief component is a cone-like steel framework whose base is placed behind, but not necessarily connected to, the jet engine exhaust pipe. The cone is formed by several steel hoops of decreasing diameter which are set one behind the other. As the exhaust wake passes through this tapering row of hoops, it is broken up and dispersed into a relatively slow moving mass.

With the muffler operating, Mr. Kirchman said, the noise of a jet engine warm-up is no greater within a radius of 500 feet than it would be within a radius of 5 miles.

Builders of Defense

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION has received two Navy contracts totaling about $2 million for development of a new high-speed torpedo capable of destroying submarines as well as surface vessels. In 1943, the Westinghouse Ordnance Department introduced an electrically powered torpedo that left no visible wake and was difficult to detect; the Navy said this week that Westinghouse torpedoes were used in sinking about 2 million tons of Japanese shipping and damaging another 1 million tons during WWII.

THE MARTIN COMPANY announces that Clarence W. Miles, Maryland attorney and former president of the Orioles, has been appointed as its general counsel. During World War II, Mr. Miles served overseas for two years with the rank of Colonel on the headquarters staff of General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The "Blue Angels" jet precision flying team, was one of the first Navy units equipped with the helmet. Navy researchers and MSA engineers worked for five years developing the APH-5 Helmet, which is based on a new material, expanded polystyrene. This material is a solid synthetic thermoplastic which has high energy-absorbing characteristics. A new technique for fitting that sizes the entire head rather than the circumference only is employed to make the helmet comfortable for the wearer. Goggles, oxygen mask suspension and communications equipment, formerly worn separately, are integrated into the new helmet.

New Volume Relates

WWII TC O'Seas Work

Transportation of men and material over land and water to overseas theaters of operation is described in the final volume on Army Transportation Corps operations during WW II.

The volume, which was published on 23 May, was written by Joseph Bykofsky and Harold Larson of the Office of the Army's Chief of Military History.

The history may be purchased from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., for $6.50.

from first page—

is inclusion of a new entitlement called the "Interim Housing Allowance." This feature is designed to cover partially the excess costs to Servicemen who are required to obtain non-Government family-type accommodations before the actual arrival of their dependents.

In such cases, the individual will be entitled to the quarters portion of the overseas station allowance to defray the cost of lease or rental of family housing. Entitlement to the quarters part of the station allowance begins on the date the married Serviceman procures the housing and runs for 60 days.

Payment of the "Interim Housing Allowance" will be made only when a commanding officer certifies that:

1. The Serviceman has made application for transportation of dependents to his permanent duty station;

2. The Serviceman was required by an order or a regulation of general application within the command to procure non-Government family housing as a condition precedent to the acceptance of the application; and,

3. The Serviceman has produced evidence of rental payments for the period for which the allowance is claimed.

Another major change to the Joint Regulations is authorization for payment of a "Temporary Lodging Allowance" upon initial assignment.

In the past, the Regulations permitted payment to a Serviceman of an allowance for the first 45 days after his arrival at an overseas station. This allowance was equal to the travel per-diem rate of the particular country to which an officer or enlisted man was assigned, whether he was alone or accompanied by dependents.

The new "Temporary Lodging" provisions increase the period to 60 days and authorize payment of a percentage of the per-diem rate. The percentage of the per-diem rate authorized to be paid varies from 50 per cent for an individual to 150 per cent for a Serviceman accompanied by three or more members of his family.

The temporary lodging allowance will be paid to all Servicemen for any day that they (either alone or accompanied by members of their family) live in a commercial hotel or hotel-like accommodations at personal expense. There must be no Government quarters available.

The daily amount of temporary lodging allowance is determined by multiplying the travel per-diem allowance for a particular country by the percentage shown in the following table:

No. Occupying Hotel Accommodation	Percentage of Per-Diem Allowed
Member only	50%
Dependent only	50%
Member and 1 Dependent	100%
Dependents only	100%
Member and 2 Dependents	125%
Dependents only	125%
Member and 3 or more Dependents	150%
3 or more Dependents only	150%

Here's an example of how the rates will work out:

In Germany, the current per-diem rate is $9.00. If a Serviceman reporting for new assignment is forced to live in hotel pending assignment of Government quarters or completion of arrangements for non-Government quarters, he would be entitled to one-half of the $9.00. If he arrives with three or more members of his family and is unable to find government or non-Government family quarters, he would be entitled to the full $9.00, plus 50 per cent—a total of $13.50.

It is important to note that the Temporary Lodging Allowance is not in addition to the per-diem allowance. In other words, the Serviceman would not get the per-diem allowance on top of the new temporary lodging allowance. The law prohibits concurrent drawing of per-diem and temporary lodging allowance.

On the surface, it would appear that Servicemen who arrive at their initial overseas area without dependents is loser, since he becomes eligible to receive the quarters part of the station allowance as soon as he finds non-Government family accommodations.

At the same time, The Defense Department Committee wrote in a new provision which authorizes payment of the "Temporary Lodging Allowance" for a maximum of 10 days to Servicemen upon completion of their overseas tours when they must vacate permanent family-type accommodations and reside elsewhere awaiting transportation back to the States.

As in the past, payment of overseas station allowances does not affect the payment of statutory quarters allowances or authorized subsistence payments.

Still another change in the Joint Travel Regulations is addition of a provision authorizing emergency cost-of-living allowances when a Serviceman, either alone or with his family, is ordered to evacuate an area due to an emergency situation. Emergency situations include war, riot, rebellion, civil uprising or any natural disaster. Emergency cost-of-living allowances governing evacuees will be prescribed by special determination of the Per Diem Travel and Transportation Committee at the request of the commander who orders the change of residence.

AF Pacific Logistics

Shifts To Hawaii 1 June

Headquarters Air Materiel Force, Pacific Area, completes its move from Japan to Wheeler AFB, Hawaii, on 1 June. Maj. Gen. W. T. Hudnell, USAF, is Commander.

Air Materiel Force, Pacific Area, is the control center for U. S. Air Force Pacific logistics operations and the multi-million-dollar supply lines which reach U. S. Air Force combat forces throughout the Pacific.

Air Materiel Force is the Pacific arm of the Air Materiel Command's worldwide logistic support program for the U. S. Air Force and Air Forces of other nations through Mutual Assistance Programs.

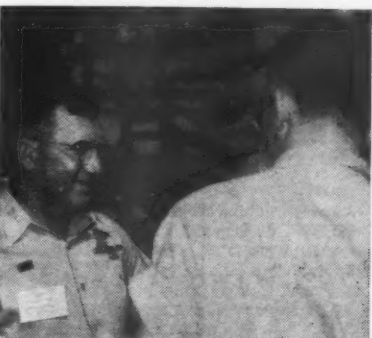

Included in the vast area supported by AMFFA are the Mutual Assistance Programs (MAP) for Taiwan, Thailand, Philippines, South Korea, Cambodia, Laos, South Vietnam, and Japan.

Col. Henley To Charleston

Col. Franklin S. Henley, USAF, Chief of Staff, Atlantic Division MATS, since November 1954, will assume command of The 1608th Air Transport Wing, Charleston AFB, S. C., on 10 July.

Col. Clinton C. Wasem, USAF, who has commanded the Wing since 1 March 1955, will depart Charleston for the National War College, Washington, D. C., where he will be a student for one year.

COL. GINES PEREZ, USA, left, was incorrectly identified in an article in the 4 May issue as Col. Gines "Gomez." Colonel Perez, Commandant of the U. S. Army Caribbean School at Ft. Gulick, Canal Zone, is pictured here talking with a Journal reporter during the recent Caribbean all-Service exercise in the Canal Zone. Colonel Perez, of course, has not changed his name; that was done erroneously in the handling of the story on the USARCARIB School, which soon will open a new course for cadets from Latin American nations. Our apologies to Colonel Perez.

Bloodhound Details

The Bristol Aeroplane Company in England this week made available details concerning the Bloodhound surface-to-air missile system, described as "the mainstay of the automatic system which will progressively take over the defense of the UK from the manned fighters."

The company announcement said:

Bloodhound is a semi-active homing missile, guided by a radar beam projected at the target, and reflected back to receiving equipment in the missile itself.

As a hostile aircraft approaches, its position is plotted and followed by Radars. Coordinates of this position are fed automatically to a second Ground Radar Unit and the missile launchers move automatically to bear on the target. As soon as the echo from the target indicates, by its strength, that the target is within range, a green light flashes in front of the launch controller who has only to press the firing button to send Bloodhound roaring into the sky.

FROM THAT MOMENT the hostile aircraft has fallen in its mission—no amount of evasive action by the target can shake Bloodhound off the scent.

Reflections of the illuminating radar beam from the target are received by Bloodhound. In this way, the target illuminating beam enables the missile to "see" the target in much the same way as a searchlight would enable it to be seen by the eye.

During flight, the missile senses the direction from which the illuminating beam is being reflected and automatically turns toward the position of the target. ANY EVASIVE ACTION the target may make is automatically followed and appropriate signals from the guidance received to the missile control surfaces continuously correct the heading of Bloodhound relative to the target.

Army Missile Cost Up

The Army, which spent 23 per cent of its procurement funds for missiles during the last fiscal year, and raised this to 43 per cent this fiscal year, intends to allocate almost 50 per cent for this purpose in the year starting 1 July.

Secretary Wilber M. Brucker has also advised Congress that the Army intends to purchase 900 medium tanks because of "an inadequate stock position."

Senator Uses JOURNAL Article To Back UMT

Senator Edward Martin (R-Pa) has raised anew the issue of universal military training, using an article from THE JOURNAL to back up his views.

He told his colleagues on the Senate floor: "A little while ago I placed in the Record a statement which was published in the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL of 90 years ago, to the effect that offense and defense depend more upon the knowledge the individual has of his weapons than upon the weapons themselves."

"Personally, I feel that the only way we can all become acquainted with proper military defense is for every boy in America to have basic military training."

His remarks were made in connection with the celebration of Armed Forces Day on 18 May.

Here is the full text of the statement which Senator Martin inserted in the Congressional Record:

"Mr. President, a recent issue of the ARMY AND NAVY JOURNAL contains quotations from the JOURNAL of 10 and 90 years ago. I was particularly impressed with the one of 90 years ago — May 11, 1867 — in which attention is called to the fact that skill in the use of weapons is so much more important than the weapon itself."

"For real defense in the United States, every man should be given basic military training."

"I ask unanimous consent that the article from the ARMY-NAVY JOURNAL be printed in the Appendix of the Record."

"There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the Record as follows:

Ninety years ago (May 11, 1867): The Indian skirmishing on the plains furnishes an appropriate occasion for some remarks we have long proposed upon the general importance of target practice. It is a long step, intrinsically, from the bow and arrow to the breech-loading rifle; yet in each so much depends on the skill of the user, that an expert Indian warrior, armed with the former weapon, will actually use it as fast and as fatally as a raw recruit will employ the latter.
